

A diagnosis of coronal dentin dysplasia is made based upon identification of characteristic symptoms, a detailed patient history, and a thorough clinical evaluation. X-rays may reveal abnormal coronal pulp formation, obliteration of the pulp chambers, pulp stones or thistle-shaped deformity of the pulp chamber.