

Fryns syndrome is a rare disease that affects both males and females equally. A 1989 French study reported 7 cases per 100,000 live births, but no other recent estimates of prevalence have been published.