

Tenosynovial giant cell tumors mainly affect individuals between 25-40 years of age, with a median age of diagnosis of 30. However, these tumors can affect the elderly and younger children as well. There is a slight female preponderance in some studies. The incidence is estimated to be 1.8 people per 1 million people in the general population based on a study conducted in the United States in 1980.