

PHACE syndrome affects more females than it does males, although researchers are not exactly sure why this is the case. It has been described affecting many different ethnic groups. The exact incidence or prevalence of the disorder is unknown. Rare disorders often go misdiagnosed or undiagnosed, making it difficult to determine their true frequency in the general population.