

Autosomal dominant porencephaly type I affects males and females in equal numbers. The incidence of the disorder in the general population is unknown. Autosomal dominant porencephaly type I may go undiagnosed or misdiagnosed, making it difficult to determine the true frequency of this disorder.