

Primary distal renal tubular acidosis affects females and males in equal numbers. The exact number of people who have this disorder is unknown. Rare disorders like primary distal renal tubular acidosis often go misdiagnosed or undiagnosed, making it difficult to determine their true frequency in the general population.