

Hyperekplexia is a rare genetic disorder that is most often present at birth and affects both males and females. In some individuals, onset of the disorder may be delayed until adolescence or adulthood. Hyperekplexia affects approximately one in 40,000 people in the United States.